3.11: Messages and Dialogue

The screenshot displays the Scholar interface for the World Universities Forum community. At the top, there is a navigation bar with 'Notifications 1' and 'Messages 1' indicators, a 'Library' icon, and the user 'Logged in as William Cope'. Below this is a secondary navigation bar with icons for 'Community', 'Creator', 'Publisher', 'Analytics', and 'Bookstore', along with a search bar for 'Peers and Communities...'. The main content area is divided into three sections: a left sidebar for the community, a central 'Activity Stream', and a right sidebar for 'Recent Activity'. The left sidebar features the community logo, a 'Send a Message' button, and lists 'COMMUNITY ADMINS (2)' (Lily Miller, Blake Williamson) and 'MEMBERS (9)' (Rahul Nanda, Tamara Stanberry). The 'Activity Stream' shows a post by Blake Williamson titled 'Georgia Southern University to Host the First World Universities Forum in the United States', with a link to a WTOC article. The 'Recent Activity' sidebar lists various actions such as 'helli born joined the community', 'Blake Williamson created the update Georgia Southern University to Host the First World Universities Forum in the United States', and 'Blake Williamson edited community World Universities Forum profile information'.

3.11.1: You can speak with other people in Scholar by messaging the community admins, community members, or peers using the button beneath their avatar. New messages can be accessed (and replied to) through the Messages area at the top of the screen.

Creativity in Education

Children are born naturally creative. Watch any young child play and you will easily observe this as they turn ordinary objects into fantastical items in elaborate stories. The design of our current education system unfortunately stifles this natural creativity as we seek to produce students who fit specific molds. Sir Ken Robinson describes this problem well in his TED talk.

3.11.2: If you want to speak with an admin about a particular work, it is best to do that at Creator => About This Work => Project => Dialogue. This way, you and the admin will have a running record of discussions about that work as it evolves. New dialogue can be accessed (and responded to) through the Notifications area at the top of the screen.
